*What is leadership?
What do leaders
do? How do they do it? Student leaders
are not who you think they are!*

Context:

The youth of the world have consistently changed the world for the better. Now it is your student's turn. Young people need to be engaged as leaders, and to assume their leadership positions on a global stage.

This program engages your students and gives them the knowledge, techniques and skills they need to assume their leadership prerogatives and responsibilities.

The Pacem Leadership Game begins with a brief interactive exercise that involves all the participants in determining and exercising the qualities of leadership that everyone possesses and uses. Youth's role as change agents, students as leaders of change, responsible leadership in the 21st century, and leadership roles for youth in today's world are covered in a multimedia, interactive mode.

Topics are woven together in ways that make academic subjects relevant and important, and provide a creative path for students to get involved in their world. Numerous leadership development activities that involve self-discovery, values clarification, goal setting, action planning, communication, and group problem solving permeate the training. Students come away with an increased understanding of their world and what they can do to as leaders to make it a better place.
